Homework Help in a Hurry

Got a problem with your homework?

- Try your textbook. Check the index or glossary. Look for sections of extra help.
- Try talking to a classmate. Two heads are better than one!
- Try asking an adult. Sometimes adults remember this stuff from when they were in school.
- Ask an older student. He or she had to do the same work not so long ago.

Beware of catching link-itis! That's when you follow links from one site to another and forget why you went online in the first place.

Still having a problem?

Get an adult to go online with you. Go to www.becybersmart.org/students and click on the green triangle. Find the title of this lesson. Click on one of its links. Explore the site. You might find the help you need.

Take a look at one of these sites now. Then answer the questions below.

What is the name of the site? _____

For which school subjects (language arts, science, and so on) will this site be useful?

What kind of homework help does this site give? For example, it might have lessons to teach kids how to do math problems. Or, it might have maps of all the states.

Problem Solved!

Get a sheet of drawing paper. Create an ad to tell other kids about one homework site. Tell them what's great about it. Tell them how to use it to solve homework problems.
